THE CRASH OUT

When I was around 8, I experienced my first major crash out. My whole world rearranged and I had to start from scratch. I'd been going to a christian elementary school in the DC metro area and always had trouble there. Granted, I was a bit out of order... sometimes... but not for no reason.

One time — I can't quite remember why — I was sent to the office during computer lab. The teacher was telling me off but didn't want me to speak, for some reason. That was really irritating. Like I was in court without a lawyer or my own 5th amendment rights. lol.

Moments like this built a lot of rebellion in me. Telling me what to do, without respecting my own self-awareness and judgement, felt like a violation of basic liberty. I grew so against the school system that at some point I was in detention every other day. Then it reached a boiling point when — again, I don't know what happened — the fourth grade teacher grabbed me by my shirt collar... and I've never been so close to slapping a bitch... respectfully. That day I said FUCK THIS SCHOOL and left.

I continued elementary school from fourth grade onward in public school, and things were really nice for a couple years after that. This is the tower cycle, and you'll see why it's an important part of the root chakra and spiritual growth now.

THE TEACHING

THE FOOL

The inner child that lives free and unashamed. The target of trauma — long lasting negative energy attachments. At that christian school, before the trauma, I was naturally the fool. Free and happy. Then you encounter the system. For me, always getting in trouble slowly built pain which influenced my identity. The identity of a problem child or delinquent.

THE TOWER

Our foundation — spiritually, physically, and mentally — is our identity. Who we think we are and what we deserve. And I couldn't escape that problem child identity without starting fresh at a new school. This is the tower coming down on a faulty foundation. Can you remember the last time you had to reinvent yourself this way? You've likely done this far earlier than you might think. But here's the kicker...

I never really shook that identity, and I've rebelled against the school system in different ways until literally last year. lol. When I decided medical school wasn't for me right now. Why? Because I never actually cleared The Fool of the pain they'd felt all those years ago. So the same tower will fall over and over until you actually remove the pain... and change your identity.

FAITH

The tower will fall again and again. Sometimes the crash out is major. Sometimes minor. But in this upward ascension, if you cannot weather the storm, you'll always be on edge, and the inner child will contract. The Fool will not be free. The answer is faith. Faith that everything works out as long as you listen to and trust the higher self, the almighty, the universe, God. Whatever you call it, there is a positive force that we move towards and YOU KNOW when you aren't...
